

[Name/Title] Joins Prosecutors Across the Nation for Conference Exploring the Future of Prosecution

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 7 -- The future of prosecution is promising and complex. [Name and title] recently joined prosecutors, police, academics, and community groups from across the country to discuss and prepare for that complex future at the National Prosecution Best Practices Conference in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Hosted by the Salt Lake County District Attorney's Office and Prosecutors' Center for Excellence, the conference explored the practice and policy of the prosecutor's office of the future. The conference featured sessions on the latest approaches to investigating and prosecuting crime, modern management and data, evidence-based prosecutor solutions for reducing violence, and community collaborations.

[Quote from prosecutor on why they wanted to attend this conference as it relates to their jurisdiction]

Optional Addition:

[#] prosecutor [name] with experience of five years or less was also at the conference on a specialized track. These new prosecutors are the future of our profession.

[Quote from prosecutor on the value of newer attorneys attending the conference, if applicable]

From rapidly evolving technology to innovations in community involvement and beyond, the field of prosecution is changing and prosecutors must change with it.

[name] looks forward to implementing new initiatives in the office based on topics discussed at the conference, particularly [program/topic of choice].

Hashtag for the conference: : #BPConference2024

###